"Foundations of person attributions and evaluations in speech"

First vocal impressions are dominated by person attributions, such as personality or emotion, and subsequent evaluations, such as liking. Some of these attributions have shown to be valid despite the sparse data available. I will introduce methods, theories and findings for the most common attributions studied and present my own work on linking in passive and interactive scenarios.